

Lorinda Anderson is a Clinical Assistant Professor at the OSU College of Pharmacy. Here, she teaches in the P2 Pharmacy Practice course and women's health therapeutics. Additionally, she works as a clinical pharmacist at the Good Samaritan Regional Medical Center in Corvallis where she rounds with one of the academic hospitalist teams.

Dr. Anderson developed the first certification program to train pharmacists how to prescribe hormonal contraception and now helps other states that are starting similar programs and is involved with research to look at outcomes related to this.
